Gandhi viewed civilization as essentially a journey of nonviolence. For him, nonviolence is the law of life. The world has come to realize this fact, as Gen. McArthur said, violence 'is not only fundamentally wrong but contains the germs of self-destruction'. The work of Gandhi demonstrated the efficacy of nonviolence as an attitude and a system of conducting personal and public life in a manner that is just, peaceful, and sustainable.

This assumes great significance in the 21st century, as modernity has enabled every individual to become global in their potential. With the Internet, satellite communication, and a global economy, our every action draws upon a world of energy, making us global in both our strength and ability. In the words of Alfred North Whitehead, the worlds "arise and coalesce" in becoming an individual what she is today. Individual life has gained 'vishwaroop (global stature). In other words, society (global society) has become the very body of every individual. There is no individual without society today. Even for self-interest one has to be socially conscious. Not being socially conscious is therefore contrary to the nature of modern life.

As Martin Luther King Jr. observed: "The choice today is not between violence and nonviolence. It is between nonviolence and nonexistence". While Einstein was correct in saying "Nuclear weapons changed everything except our way of thinking", Nelson Mandela was wise to seek the reconciliation of people to one another as crucial to building the unity required for progressive collective action. From personal deceit to warfare and ecological destruction we witness consequences in life of ethical transgressions at every front – with humankind threatening the very prospect of life on earth. Greta Thunberg and others remind us that good intentions must be manifested in actions, or else be properly condemned as empty rhetoric.

More than just a Fellowship Certificate Program, this course of study seeks to be relevant to every successful applicant, both locally and globally, as we work together to become more aware and empowered global citizens.

With a view to introducing Gandhian nonviolence to new and future generations, Sevagram Ashram Pratishtan in association with Gandhi International, Academic University College for Non-Violence and Human Rights-AUNOHR, International Centre of Nonviolence, Durban University of Technology and Portland Community College offer a Four-Month online training program on nonviolence and peace.
